There is no definite news from the election precincts throughout the county, but it is estimated by some that this county will give 1200 majority for the amendments.

Mrs. J. B. Wells came up from the Point this morning, in company with the Mother Superior and one of the sisters of the Incarnate Word convent who have been visiting Mrs. Wells at her summer home.

One of the great attractions for the excursionists to the Point next Sunday will be the ascension of a real airship at night. The management of the festivities has gone to great expense in ordering this airship and the sight will be worth a trip to the Point.

A very large coon was shot last night in the hen house at the home of the editor, being caught in the act of killing a chicken. It was quite a handsome animal, and was doubtless someone's pet. We regret that it was necessary to shoot him, but can't afford to raise chickens to feed pet coons. A number of chickens were killed in another yard in the same vicinity a few nights ago by a coon which afterwards escaped. Probably the marauder was the same coon that was killed last night.

Fort Brown Items.

Company H, 23d Infantry, under command of Captain O'Connor, left the post at 7 o'clock Monday morning for their annual target practice at the range at Loma Alta. They will probably be gone about three weeks. Practice will be held in accordance with the new rules for practice with the Krag-Jorgensen magazine rifle.

Private George Morris, Hospital Corps, left on the Alice stage Wednesday en route to his new station at Fort McIntosh.

Saddler Walcott, Troop G, is practicing revolver firing with a view to representing the troop in the cavalry competition to be held at Fort Wingate, New Mexico, in September. He is going to try to finish near the top, and bring back the gold medal if possible.

Lieut. Frank Parker, 5th Cavalry, is out with a party making a Military reconnaissance north of the post. They are to be absent several days.

The soldiers at this post were among the unfortunate ones who have to wait for their pay for the month of June until Congress shall provide for their payment, the appropriation for the pay of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, having been a considerable amount short of the requirements of the service.

Hospital Steward Dykstra, is out with Company H, at the target range. We hope he may not break any of the ambulance springs coming in, as he will probably be able to make a shadow by the time he returns to the post.

SITUATION IN INDIA.

Boston Herald.
The recent disturbances that have occurred in India, leading in one instance to the assassination of three English officers, have this serious side to them, that they are thought to be parts of a general conspiracy. While the English possess India they are not of India; that is, the lower class of the native people do not take them into their confidence. The latter, in too many instances, have been regarded by their English rulers as an inferior, as well as a subjugated race, and this feeling tends to keep the people apart. This was made manifest at the time of the great mutiny, when the plans of the uprising were spread throughout the length and breadth of the country, although the English rulers rested in almost entire ignorance of the danger to which they were exposed. In the present instance it is well known that the native community in which the assassination referred to occurred were in some way aware that it was to take place days before the murderous attack was made. In one instance it is believed that the native escort of an officer who had been marked for assassiation saved his life by closing around him in such a manner as to prevent the assassins from getting access to him, and yet these native troops could not be made to say that they had heard anything about the murderous conspiracy.

From debate that has taken place in the English parliament, it appears that some of the governing authorities of India believe that these disturbances are due to the seditious character of the criticism and comments that appear in the native Indian newspapers. The English have extended to India in most respects the same freedom of the press that is enjoyed by Englishmen at home. But, in the opinion of some, this is a mistake, since it leads to the stirring up of murderous feelings. On the other hand, there are loyal natives in India, representing the educated classes, who believe it would be a serious political mistake to take from the native newspapers the freedom that they now possess of commenting upon government action. The press is now a safety valve, and if its utterances are studied by the English officers they can discover in what way various proceedings of theirs strike the minds of the natives. It is asserted that the outrages in question spring from the unwise methods adopted in attempting to suppress the bubonic plague, and that if a little more consideration had been shown in the employment of native rather than English soldiers, the same ends could have been attained without incurring popular hostility. One Indian gentleman, writing to a London newspaper, asserts that if he wished to organize a conspiracy for the purpose of driving the English out of India, he could not conceive of a better first step to take than to have the English government suppress the native newspapers, the only means they now have of accurately discovering the sentiments of their Indian fellow countrymen.
